Intellectual Milestones and Development Ages 10-14

How You Can Respond to the development

- Listen to your kids as they explore and test their new thinking abilities—even if they say things you disagree with or don't like. Take their opinions seriously.
- Don't shut down or ridicule their ideas, which hurts their self-confidence and openness to you. Instead, ask follow-up questions and ideas that push them to think even more deeply.
- Continue to focus on the importance of school and learning. Even if you can't help with the more-complex topics they are learning as they get older, your interest and questions reinforce the importance of learning.

Encourage curiosity and critical thinking about the world around them. Talk about tough issues in the news and follow up on things they are interested in.
